The disposition to learn to think philosophically will then easily be yielded to. And now, finally, the natural sciences. What profitable objects for learning and teaching do the descriptive sciences--botany, geology, and mineralogy--afford! It is a mistake to suppose that university teachers lay most weight on systematic knowledge. Not at all. The systematic method, it is true, is learned at the universities. It does no one harm to be able to learn and distinguish a certain number of plants, animals, or stones. But the instruction proper should consist in the training of the senses, especially of the sight and feeling. At present we have to lament that a large part of our students have no exact knowledge of colors, that they make false estimates of the forms of the objects they see, and they manifest no comprehension of...
