Createspace, United States, 2014. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 216 x 140 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . A fascinating and frightening picture of a believable futuristic city where technology is king and the citizens are oppressed and their every move is recorded and monitored. There is a love story in here, a criminal underworld, spiritualism, dangerous journeys trying to evade the authorities. The pace of the narrative is exciting from start to end, an entertaining and thought provoking read. It is 2062 and the world is a very different place. It is 40 years since a series of natural disasters and earth changes have caused the world's economy to collapse and destroyed the old world system. Unable to protect their citizens from plagues and a climate out of control, nations and political systems have shown themselves to be impotent and inept. They have been replaced through the rise of self contained city states. The Earth's remaining population of approximately 500 million is now restricted to living within the confines of the 250 newly constructed citadels located worldwide. By their mutual consensus, it has been agreed that outside of these metropolises, the land is to be purposely depopulated and left to nature, so that the environment might heal and repair itself. With nations no longer fighting over control of natural resources, there is no more need for war. Citadels have replaced armies with strong internal security apparatus to police their citizens. Then there are the military Rangers who police the environment and relocate or cull any unauthorized population. Throughout the world, there are still small communities of outlanders who refuse to live in the new citadels. They stay hidden and live beyond the pale and control of these urban metropolises. They live a...
