Lukes boots thudded across the lifeless grass while the sound of the gushing river below grew louder the closer as they hiked to the waterway. His gut clenched. A few techies threw cool glances at him, the big shot detective. Many of them remembered his excitement when he left to join a better force. Ahead, Conroy slowed at the edge of the gray water. Unkempt brush and litter covered the ground. An overgrown shrub wagged a warning in the breeze and bit into Lukes pant legs. With a curse, he freed his clothing. Enjoying yourself, detective Conroy tossed over his shoulder. Yeah, its as much fun as watching the Yankees pound the Sox at Fenway. Luke picked his way through the bushes to join the detective near two uniforms. By Conroys feet, he found the woman. The last break in the temperature melted most of the ice and raised the water level, Conroy told him. She was a floater who got caught in the brambles. Luke crouched beside the woman, who rested in a semi fetal position. She appeared small, about five-feet, and helpless. Her arms...
